THINGS SEEN AT THE ASHANTEE CAPITAL.

A correspondent of the New York Herald, writing from Cape Coast Castle under date of February 12th, gives an interesting description of Coomassie, the capital of Ashantee, the arrival there of Sir Garnet Wolseley's force, its evacuation and subsequent destruction, from which the following facts are gleaned. 'Coomassie was situated on a low eminence, and was about three miles in circumference. The principal streets were broad and straight, the main ones being from 150 to 200 feet in width, and large enough to accommodate 50,000 people. The houses had straight porticos, white washed and raised several feet from the ground. The facades of the streets were ornamented with designs in half Moorish and native, worked in plaster, made of fine ash to clay, and the view looking up or down one of the shore sights as which were lined with patriarchal trees, was such as to give to one the exact oriental idea of the fabled fairy lands. A people who did not embellish its capital. The kingly palace was a collect on of buildings with mud walls and roofs thatched with bamboo all being surrounded with a high palisade of bamboo eight to ten high. It covered an extensive area, but externally was unimposing, though the buildings of its design imparted to it an air of stateliness. The various courts and apartments were found littered with the personal effects of the king, his queen, his family, his court, upon the approach of the British army. The king's private residence, situated in an inner court, was built of stone plastered over with lime mortar. It was a solid square structure, two stories high, with flat mounts and loopholed. Near it was a block house (stone) which, according to rumor, has never been quite dry from human blood. In and about the courts and corridors were seen emblems of royalty in the form of state umbrellas, while the numerous personal effects of the king were to be seen scattered about just as they had been left by his frightened followers. Heaps of tapestry, rolls of the finest and most expensive carpetings, silks, shawls, drums and other musical instruments, weapons and munitions of war, cashmere robes, fabrics and other paraphernalia of an Eastern monarch were lying about, in the utmost confusion. In one of the apartments was found a small box, bearing the lineaments of the authoress of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," while in the king's sleeping apartment was discovered the royal bedstead, a marvel of mid-ival workmanship. The bed was of a rich cotton, fine covered with crimson silk damask. Seven masks of beaten gold were found in a trunk in the apartment, the gold in each of them being worth $80. A gold nugget necklace and a sword presented to the king by Victor Emanuel the first of Italy, are also here. Trophies similar to those already named and abundant in quantity were found in other rooms, and it is estimated that the plunder taken from Coomassie and the surrounding towns found would alone give each officer and each sailor engaged in the expedition prize money as much as prize money, yet no attempt was made to possess it by those in authority. Immediately on the capture of the city, fever attacked, and proved a most sickening spectacle. It was in a decayed state situated in the heart of the city, and was productive of the most horrible stench imaginable. Twenty deaths by cholera were found, thirty-four died within a few days after the arrival of the troops. It is estimated that upon thousand people have been ruthlessly sacrificed here for a period of fifty years to appease the gods, and that fifty-seven thousand persons have been slaughtered with the torture stakes of fetich. The city was abandoned by the Ashantees on the night of February 4th, and immediately took possession of the city. During the night following the capture of the city the Ashantees in limited numbers armed with rifles and muskets, and bearing upon their heads baskets of valuables, filled out of the city, and from these to five thousand armed men were then permitted to move away, to circle to the contrary being issued by the Commander-in-Chief. During this night the Ashantees, perhaps anticipating the fire which doomed the Russians to burn Moscow, attempted to destroy their city, but were prevented by the efforts of the officers and privates of the army who extinguished the fires that had been started. Alarm, distrust and suspicion of the Ashantees caused the army to secure repose, and the night was passed in watching. On the morning of the fifth the city was in a state of desertion, and no natives were to be seen. Sir Garnet at once ordered two regiments to proceed to the coast. He was desirous that the king should return to Coomassie in order that a treaty might be signed and [illegible] might thus make the city [illegible] The king should be well treated if he came, but the latter, although promising to do so, consistently with actions and words, did not enter the city. On the morning of the ninth the property was burned by order, and at six o'clock the wounded were borne away in the direction of the coast. The sick took its place in the human hurricane, and the Forty Second Highlanders were stabled to serve as a rear guard. In accordance with the orders of the [illegible] city was then fired in different parts, and the army was soon in full retreat, reaching Cape Coast Castle six days after leaving Coomassie.

The writer of the letter takes Sir Garnet to task for the lack of proper attention to the control department of the expedition, for his vacillating conduct toward the king, caused, perhaps, by a too serious regard for what Exeter Hall might say, his waste of time in endeavoring to reveal, and, in the king's absence, destroy, when this treachery was evident; the lack of precautions for guarding the capital from night attack, fire or plunder; the absence of an order forbidding plunder by his own troops; his hasty retreat from Coomassie; his failure to visit Bantamah and Aminsche, important cities situated a mile from Coomassie; and the permission he gave the Ashantees (tardily if not otherwise) to leave the city with unmolested valuable.

GOVERNOR DIX ON THE PRESIDENT'S VETO.—Governor Dix says in regard to the President's veto of the inflation bill:—"I am exceedingly rejoiced at the action of President Grant. He has done his duty nobly. He might have signed the bill, and said he was doing in obedience to the voice of the people as expressed by a majority of the representatives in Congress; but in the course he adopted he raised himself to the summit of statesmanship by disregarding clamor on all sides and consulting only the best interests of the country as a whole. His veto is not for the North nor the South, but for the entire nation. It will take little time to have the wisdom of his action universally admitted. President Grant had sufficient discernment to see that the cry for inflation was but an ephemeral craving for relief from financial pressure that no amount of expansion in the currency could meet. It is a complaint demanding another remedy than inflation. The business people of the West and Southwest will endorse the President's veto. Inflation would have produced results disastrous in the masses of the people. The working man would be the first to suffer. While wages would remain their present level the necessaries of life would immensely advance. In this view of the matter it is only right that the people for having the courage and wisdom to act according to the dictates of plain common sense and honest—"

HOME ADORNMENT.—There is not a place in the entire country but can, to some extent be improved in ornamental appearance and effect, with little trouble and at little expense. Farmers especially are apt to think because they are poor, or means limited, they are unable to carry out any ideas of improvement, or if they happen to be well off, are always waiting for some time to come when money will be apparently more easily spared, or they can have more leisure for the purpose.

In fact there is a belief widely current that pretty houses and attractive surroundings do not belong to the farmer's humble lot, but to the village resident, or those who come from the city, who alone are supposed to possess the proper taste and necessary funds. This is all wrong; and if country people will only think of it, they will find the subject an interesting one, will discover many and inexpensive plans, and will be gratified at the subsequent effects.

Is your farm house homely, gable roofed and brown, and you think you cannot afford to build a new one? Never mind; if there is only a comfortable, within the old one, the boldest, with rich carpets and discomfited sports in a new one. Paint up your old brown house, you can afford that at least—let the colors be soft or lively as you like; shingles over head, and make the roof clean and dry; prop up your blinds in beautiful green; twine around your porch the honeysuckle or climbing rose, and wind up the sides and corners of your house the ivy or some pretty running chamber.

Take carefully from your woods or fields the evergreen, spruce or fir, and plant a dozen or more in front of your door. Plant along the roadside a few maples and elms in alternate rows; let your wife send a few cents and get some flower-seeds and bulbs, and plant them along in front of your parlor windows. Then wait for the gentle warmth of the sun, and watch the appearing of the leaves, the budding of the flowers, the suckles and roses, and notice how quickly the creeper climbs up the sides of your house.

We think some beautiful day in summer, when some of your farm friends come to visit you and yourself, let fall to their exclamations of pleasure at the ample yet wonderful transformation, look to the pleased looks and bright smiles of your wife and children and then see if you don't feel that you are a man, that you have got something to compel respect from neighbors. Watch the travelers by your house as they partially stop and look over your little yard with admiration, and testify to its beauty; watch the influence of these little things upon your children, how rapidly their taste for neatness and order things improves how much more cheerful they are in disposition, how quickly they gain a superior standing among their school fellows, how popular their home becomes as a visiting place among their friends.

What a pleasure it is to think of home, when at some distant day, any or all are found clustered together far away, how precious is the memory of father and mother, the old farmhouse, and its pretty door-yard. But, while they are all at home, see how gradually books and papers find their way into your house, how well sheep are fed and remembered how reasonably your own taste improves; see how much better your farm is than formerly, how well you get along, perhaps not laying up much, or any indeed, yet in spite of the extra expenses men see somehow they are all about your farm in odious ways, you have better, dress better, and are more influential in society.

Tell me, then, whether it does not pay to adorn your homes?

MONDAY, APRIL 27, 1874.

CREMATION

The property of burning instead of burying the dead has been for some time past the subject of discussion in a number of European countries, and of late has excited no little interest in our own land. In Vienna and in several German cities cremation societies have been organized, which, if report is true, are already constructing the necessary apparatus for reducing the human body to ashes, and we shall probably soon hear of the result of their experiments. Cremation is no new thing as every reader of ancient history knows but the practice has not survived among civilized nations, and the few isolated instances that are on record during the last century or so have been regarded as worthy of note as extraordinary and unusual.

Of late, however, there has been an effort for the revival of this custom. At the Vienna Exhibition, last Summer, visitors saw a glass box, about a foot long, eight inches wide and eight inches deep, filled with white ashes—the remains of a woman, thirty five years old, which originally weighed one hundred and ten pounds and were reduced by cremation to two and a half pounds, by Professor Brunetti of Padua. Dr Brunetti has written several works giving the results of his experiments.

Sir Henry Thompson, of England, who has also interested himself in this subject, has made similar investigations, the reports of which have been widely published. The last named gentleman has thus far confined his essays in cremation to the bodies of animals, and has shown that the whole process of burning may be conducted in a properly constructed cylindrical vessel, heated to a temperature of 2000 Fahrenheit, in a powerful reverberating furnace. And that all gases may be oxidized in chambers of fire brick, so that from a chimney of the ordinary height neither smoke nor gas will escape during the whole process. He would treat the human body the same way having a furnace so arranged that the body, in its casket, should be slid into a heated chamber, from which in the course of twenty or thirty minutes, the residuum of ashes might be removed and restored to relatives and friends.

On this side of the ocean we believe no one has practically tested the process. Many have doubted that its advocates honestly believe in their theory or advised its adoption for any other reason than a desire to bring themselves into notoriety; but it appears that in New York certain prominent citizens are quite in earnest in the matter and are endeavoring to bring the public over to their views. To this end they have organized a cremation society and are continually enrolling new members. Letters in sympathy with the movement are daily received from all parts of the country, and published. The society has looked up the legal bearings of the point in and found nothing in the law that prohibits the disposing of dead bodies by burning. It has also drafted a charter whereby the Legislature may incorporate the association and thus enable it to hold capital, enough to provide all the paraphernalia necessary for cremation purposes. At a largely attended meeting last Friday evening progress was reported, and it was voted to call a public meeting in advocacy of the project at an early day. It was stated that the company proposed to dispose of bodies by cremation "at as near cost as possible," which is estimated to be at from five to eight dollars. It is said that the advocates of cremation are many and apparently earnest. They claim that this process of disposing of the dead is cheaper, obviating most of the expense attendant upon funerals as now conducted and dispensing with the necessity for cemetery sites in the cemeteries. They hold this is a sanitary point of view it is an improvement, for no one can doubt that grave yards in large cities and towns, and the frequent carelessness in the burial of the dead may be productive of great evils. They argue, also, that as the destruction of the body after death is inevitable, it is better for it to be wrapped in a winding sheet of flame and be purified by fire, than to moulder away in the ground. They adduce many more reasons which we have neither time nor space to mention.

The theory of the cremationists is all very well; the practice is quite another thing. That an orthodox Bishop of Manchester said recently that he felt a shudder at the thought of burning the dead, and yet he thought the time would come when the idea would be familiar to the mind. Most people feel as the Bishop says he felt, but we doubt if many agree with him as to the probability of the general adoption of the custom. It will take more than a generation to overcome that sentiment which looks upon a dead friend or relative not dark clay or nothing more, with a kind of veneration, and feels that it does larger a duty of affection when it commits the inanimate body to its kindred dust. It seems like sacrilege to injure or even mar the frail tenement of life when the spirit has left it, and to our thinking it will be a long time before a loving son will consign his parent to a chemical retort, or a parent will consent that the remains of a darling child be calcined in a heated digester. All arguments of economy and health are put to flight by the revolting idea, and all the logic of science is naught when it conflicts with the affections. No matter if the old Greeks and Romans burned their dead, their ashes and their urns are nothing to us of the present day. The churchyard or cemetery which holds the remains of some dear one is to the bereaved a sacred place, and a visit to the grave brings back the silent sleeper into all the familiar associations of life, there is comfort in the thought that the friend who has passed from sight is quietly slumbering in undisturbed repose.

The great crowded cities, with their ever-growing population, may possibly conclude that it is necessary for the sake of the living to adopt some other and heatier method of removing the dead than that now in vogue, but in the smaller communities regard and care for the last resting places of the loved and lost will forbid the adoption of cremation.

The Senate Finance Committee will this week consider the House finance bill. A Washington despatch states that it is thought by many conservative men that the bill may be framed acceptably to the Senate, combining the feature of redemption proposed in that bill with the right to issue additional bank notes on condition that a certain proportion of the legal tender notes be withdrawn at the same time, and many are of the opinion that if such a bill be reported from the Senate Committee, with a provision authorizing free banking, it will pass the Senate and House and receive the approval of the President.

A Washington special says that Senator Hamlin thinks the vote the greatest act of President Grant's life; that it will make the East a unit for him, and the Democrats not dare oppose him in the East. The West is not so united for inflation, especially Illinois, Indiana and Ohio. Their interests are in unison with the other Northern States. He is also reported as saying that the vote is also a knocking up of the Democratic party in the East.

President Sumners now say that the next Congress will run to the middle of September

Waltz, the Albany murderer, will get a good deal of sympathy when he ascends the scaffold next week. He confesses to having killed an organ grinder.

Query: Is the bill, reported in the Senate, "to regulate the nations gas-works," introduced to control the speech-making of the nationists?

Sickles has been heard from. The Paris Register says he is just now employed in negotiating for a large loan in aid of an important railway.

Secretary Richardson left Washington on Saturday for Baltimore, where he will take a steamer for Charleston, on a brief trip for his health. He will visit several prominent points during his absence.

Sir Lambton Lorraine sailed from New York Saturday for England. He was escorted to the steamer by General Hancock and staff and a delegation from the Army and Navy Club.

The proposal for Congress to recognize the independence of Cuba finds small favor anywhere. The general impression seems to be that it will be wise to wait until there is something to recognize.

King Kalakaua, the recently-elected ruler of the Sandwich Islands, served for thirteen years in the Fire Department of Honolulu, and at the time he was elected King was foreman of Hawaii Engine Company No. 1.

The Cincinnati Enquirer asks by what Chairman will authority he has for the statement that the Democratic party is a hard money party, and asserts that no such doctrine can be found in any National Democratic platform.

The bill concerning citizenship now pending in Congress would have the effect, if passed, to render Miss Nellie Grant, daughter of the President of the United States, an alien in the event of her marriage with Sartorious.

The Manchester Mirror, in reply to a correspondent, states that the Constitution of New Hampshire makes people who are not of the Protestant religion ineligible to the office of Representative in the Legislature. The provision, however, is a dead letter.

It is said that Horace Maynard, Congressman at Large from the State of Tennessee, and Chairman of the House Banking and Currency Committee, wishes the place of Associate Justice of the Court of Claims, vacated by the death of Judge Milligan, of the same State, a few days ago.

Senator Washburn's course in Congress is to be closely watched by the woman suffragists he leaves behind him, for they declare him to be logically committed to the woman's claim by his recommendation that the votes of women be counted in the settlement of the liquor question. The Women's Journal calls his attention to the fact that more than half the inhabitants of Massachusetts are women.

Ben Butler says the bill passed by Congress, now happily vetoed, did not seek to inflate the currency, but to expand it, some years ago a State junior agent was investigated by our Legislature. He was charged with adulterating the liquors he sold at the state rum shop but he replied that he did not adulterate the liquor—he only distended them, which was done by mixing with them a cheaper article. But he ceased to be State liquor agent (Boston Herald.

ONE STORY GOOD TILL ANOTHER IS TOLD. A correspondent of the Argus at Brunswick thinks it is high time to expose against Governor Dingley, and, in the absence of any real ground to bring an accusation, proceeds to draw upon his imagination for the required material. The first charge is that Hon William Caldwell has had a new office created for him at $1800 a year, the increase being that Governor Dingley made the new place. The office of "Commissioner of Sinking Fund" was created by the Legislature on the urgent recommendation of Hon. J. H. Williams of Augusta, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, who represented that the large business of the office and the constantly increasing amount of the sinking fund required an officer who should be charged with the sinking fund. Mr Williams was singled out by our reformers from among all the good men in the State as the reform candidate for Governor, consequently his suggestion on so important a subject could hardly fail to commend itself to the ordinary legislator. As to a new office created in the Educational Department, it is a myth. No such office has been created. The clerkship has always existed in connection with the office and that position has simply been filled with a new man. Besides, in making such a change, another clerk is to be secured who is required to discharge duties for which the State has always paid several hundred dollars; so that by the change Governor Dingley not only secures greater efficiency in the office, but also saves $650 per annum to the State.—Portland Press.

The New York Evening Post suggests as a good text for Gen. Butler's next discourse on the financial question, the following words spoken by President Grant on the steps of the Capitol March 4, 1861, and since reaffirmed by him:—

"Let it be understood that no repudiator of one farthing of our public debt will be trusted in public places, and it will go far towards strengthening a credit which ought to be the best in the world."

Gov. Dix, in one of those masterly letters which become part of a nation's literature, says, in speaking of the veto message of the President, "The veto is not for the North, nor the East, but for the entire nation." This tells the best side of the story. The President has destroyed sectional legislation.

A Washington special states that certain Western Independents have been canvassing the House as to the possibilities of the passage of a bill for the refunding of the income tax. Those who have kept [illegible] express their confidence in the [illegible] which, No doubt in those cases [illegible] adjournment 4 really [illegible]

DR. SCHENCK'S

Standard Remedies!

The standard remedies for all diseases of the lungs are Schenck's Pulmonic Syrup, Schenck's Sea-weed Tonic and Schenck's Mandrake Pills, and if taken before the lungs are destroyed, a speedy cure is effected.

All these three medicines are to be used in connection with the Pulmonic Syrup in all cases of Consumption, Liver Complaint or Dyspepsia.

The Pulmonic Syrup ripens the morbid matter in the lungs, causing them to cast it up in easy expectoration. When this takes place, Schenck's Sea-weed Tonic is to be taken in connection with the Pulmonic Syrup, to prevent the food from souring on the stomach, and to create a healthy appetite. Schenck's Mandrake Pills are to be taken to act on the liver, convert the bile into healthy blood, and remove the gall bladder, the bile stasis freely, and the liver is soon restored.

Schenck's Sea Weed Tonic is a gentle stimulant and alterative, is the aid of which, when it is taken in connection with the food and prevents souring. It excites the digestion, by uniting the food with the gastric juice, and converting the blood of Pulmonic syrup will make good blood; then the liver is restored, and the patient will surely get well if care is taken to prevent a relapse.

Dr. Schenck can be consulted at the Quincy House Boston on Wednesday, March 25th, April 8th and 22nd, May 13th and 27th.

Advice will be given free, but for a thorough examination with the Spirometer, the charge is $5.00.

Schenck's Medicines are sold by all Druggists throughout the country.

Schenck's Almanac can be had of all Druggists free.
